There was a circus coming to nown the next day, and the lad jumped at the job. It was a purty hot day. The lad worked on his job until he looked, when he got through, as if he had been douned in the creek. When he rode the horus to town the owner didn't know the animal, he looked so sleek and that fine. The owner made a mount, and, turning to the lad, he says: 'Much obliged,' and rode off, leaving the lad by the stille-block, for everybody to

'The lad got to be a man and had become a storekeeper in the town where he had got the mit from the law-yer. Every farmer in this part of the country had bought goods from the and when the women folks went to town to trade the merchant always gave their children a stick of candy or a lump of sugar.
"Bout this time there was to be an election. The lawyer had got it into his head that he would begin his political career by being elected judge. One of his backers was a man who become president of the United States. become president of the United States.

"The young merchant had kep' his mouth shut all these years, but when the lawyer began to run for judge the young merchant hired us extra clerk in his place in the store and went out into the country. There wasn't a farmhouse where he didn't stay all night, and when he left in the morning the lawyer had less as many retree. the lawyer had lost as many votes as the house had. Purty soon it got poised abroad what the merchant was doing, and then the man who got to be presi-dent of the United States went to the young man and asked him what he meant by legging against his candidate.

"The young merchant told him has the lawyer has beat him out of four bits, and thereby caused him to los a chance of sceing the circus. "The man saw that the young mer more exacted the deference due to him, all along the road. Once beside him, all along the road. Once beside a deep, sluggish stream we came upon an encampment of nomada, who had come down out of the mountains to wash and shear their animals, says Hasper's Weekly. They were hard at work, the boys holding down the sheep and goats, while their elders removed the fleeces. The women, to whom health lent a huxom kind of beauty, and who, after the manner of mountain worsen, were lax about the exposure of their faces, went about among the flocks, drawing milk into earthen vessels. As I leaped across the stream, camera in hand, a great cry of protest went up, and the chief of the outift, a bronsed, bearded and rangy gentleman, who missed his proper place in the world by not being born where he could play right guard on a Princeton eleven, came running with half a down of his proper place. he could play right guard on a Princeton eleven, came running with half a dozen of his retainers and a dozen Kurdish sheep dogs at his heels. He was rearing lustily and waving his arms in mandate to me to get back to the other bank, and reaching for a sort of bush hook that he carried to make the argument good. In the wildest plunge of his omalaught he caught sight of the seyyid's green belt. He stopped as if some thoughtful person had pulled an airbrake on him, and began to koutow.

With wrath and reverence strue.

With wrath and reverence strug with wrath and reverence strug-ging in him he asked the seyyid what sort of being I was and what I was going to do to his people with that "box which had the evil eye in the end of it." It was explained to him. He looked doubtingly at the camera, then whispered to the seyyid: "Is it a sin?"

No," said the lawgiver. "No." said the lawgiver.
The chief relaxed his hold of his snickersnes, and put his entire company, men, boys, sheep, goats and rosy-checked women, through their paces, while the cvil eye winked knowingly and often.
